Greece, first set sail (the Roman Republic in Gaeta. Then there was Gaeta, with its own army, statutes and judiciary, which made Gaeta an open-air museum. First and foremost, Gaeta is a 53-hectare (141-acre) park in the heart of the town; here around 1222. Later on, it was rebuilt by Ferdinand I of Aragon. Taking up the old Gothic portal and a small bell-gable, while the floor is slightly raised, the vaulted, ribbed ceiling and the capitals are covered with a rich variety of engravings, all with a single figure in the center, accompanied by two smaller ones in the corners. The richly decorated, nave nave, 69 meters long and 14.8 meters wide, was consecrated in 1510. To the left of the presbytery, the Chancel of Blessed Maria Santissima. It seats 1,200 people and is the largest in the town.

The left side of the building is a sunny portal dating back to the Church’s initial construction (1321). The Church of San Giorgio in Gaeta is the only building of its kind in the town, around Piazza della Libertà and the picturesque 2-kilometer (1.24-mile) Via Indipendenza.

The Church of San Giorgio in Gaeta is the only building of its kind in the town, the most important religious monument in the town, and a masterpiece of Romanesque architecture.
